Family is one of the most wonderful blessings one can enjoy.

That is why this is such a difficult time for us. My girls are 18 now and are going to pursue what the Lord has put in their heart. We leave next week for the U.S. They will be there for about 10 years, preparing for the rest of their life in ministry. Although my girls and I have never been apart in their life I am also proud of them for their obedience to follow God's call.

First, they will study in Alabama to get their doctorate in physical therapy and then they will go to Colorado to attend Charis Bible College.

I will return to Thailand in 2 months. We have received several invitations to minister while I am there and my girls are hoping to be able to minister anywhere they can as well.

Knowing it would be some time before we would all be together again, we decided to take a short vacation together to the coast and out to one of Thailand's many islands. We had a wonderful time enjoying the beautiful island and spending time together talking about the future. We had not been able to take such a vacation in over 5 years so it will always be a special memory.

I ministered at our church last Sunday and introduced the Discipleship Evangelism English-Thai version that we just completed translating. I will begin classes with them when I return so that everyone will be trained and equipped to go out and begin discipling others; they are all excited and ready to participate.

Besides getting my girls moved to America, my main goal during my short time will be to minister to as many people as possible. I have a message the Lord has put in my heart and I also want to present the vision God has for the Home of Hope and Grace Christian School. We are ready to build a team of people who share this vision and have compassion for reaching the lost with the gospel.

We are so thankful to all our faithful partners; we could not do any of this without you.

We will be attending the minister's conference at Andrew Wommack Ministries in Colorado next month; I know that it will be awesome. I'm sure we will have lots to report on next month.

Bless you all,
The DeVine Family
